

What is Coaching?

Coaching is an adult learning strategy that is used to build the capacity of a parent or colleague to improve existing abilities, develop new skills, and gain a deeper understanding of his or her practices for use in current and future situations.

Security of the parent security of the parent, which the parent security of the parent security of the parent, which the parent security of parent security of parent security security of parent security security of parent security security of parent security security to analyze current strategies and provides the parent an opportunity to analyze current strategies and security security security of security security

Coaching in Early Childhood Intervention

Coaching is used for talking with parents and other care providers to recognize what they are already doing that works to support child learning and development as well as building upon existing or new ideas. Rather than telling the other person what he or she needs to do or doing something only to/with the child, individuals using coaching start with what the other person knows and is doing in order to develop and implement a joint plan that meets the needs and priorities of the person being supported through coaching. Coaching involves asking questions; jointly thinking about what works, does not work, and why; trying ideas with the child; modeling with the child for the parent; sharing information; and jointly planning next steps. In light of the increasingly available evidence for supporting young children with disabilities in natural settings and the intent of Part C to build the competence and confidence of care providers for supporting child learning and development, coaching is a research-based strategy useful for interacting with the important adults in the life of the child.

Family, Infant & Preschool Program of the J. Iverson Riddle Developmental Center

NC DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERICES